Help Poor Families Break Out of the Cycle of Poverty

Most of the countries where Hidaya Foundation works are agricultural economies, meaning the majority of their populations are farmers. Unfortunately, unlike in developed countries, these poor farmers do not receive any subsidies. In many instances as of late, disasters such as flooding or drought destroys these poor farmers' crops, and they end up getting seeds for their new crops on loans, then they become in debt that they can't get out of, when they were struggling to get by to begin with.

Under Hidaya's Self Employment Program - our Farmer Assistance Project aims to help poor families break out of the cycle of poverty by giving them seeds, fertilizers, pesticides, and technical know-how free of cost.
